King County Superior Court Annual Report

Message from Presiding Judge Laura Inveen

On behalf of the judges, commissioners, and staff of the King County Superior Court, I am pleased to present our 2016 Annual Report highlighting the court's accomplishments over the past year. I hope you will find it informative and useful.

I am proud of the court's many achievements in 2016, but I am perhaps most excited by several recent innovations at our Juvenile Court. Over the last several years, the court has placed increasing emphasis on "restorative services" within the juvenile justice system. These services sometimes seek to restore a youth's productive relationship with the community and other times seek to restore a youth's relationship with his or her own family.

Perhaps the most significant accomplishment in this area in 2016 was the implementation of the Family Intervention and Restorative Services Program, or "FIRS." FIRS focuses on youth who have been violent in the home against a family member. Parents often do not want to contact the police when their child has been violent because they do not want their child to have a criminal record. The traditional court process does little to address a youth's underlying issues, which may include mental health challenges, substance abuse, or difficulty managing emotions. FIRS flips everything around. It functions as a diversion program for youth who have been violent at home. Youth can be referred without charges being filed, and services offered by the program can address underlying issues without the need for adjudication and court orders. This is a truly groundbreaking approach to juvenile justice.

I also want to acknowledge the departure of seven judges from our bench. Judges William Downing, Richard Eadie, Brian Gain, Bruce Heller, Ron Kessler, Laura Gene Middaugh, and Palmer Robinson stepped down from the bench at the end 2016 and headed toward new adventures, but they left a legacy of countless accomplishments and contributions to this court which have improved the administration of justice for all, and we are most grateful.

I want to express my sincere appreciation to the thousands of King County citizens who served as jurors in Superior Court and to the hundreds of volunteers who served as Community Accountability Board members, CASAs, and in other capacities. I want to thank the King County Bar Association for its steadfast support of court-based services. And I want to commend the professionalism of all Superior Court and Department of Judicial Administration employees. Without your credibility and commitment to public service, the court could never achieve its mission.

King County Superior Court – Mission Statement:

To serve the public by ensuring justice through accessible and effective forums for the fair, understandable, and timely resolution of legal matters.

King County Superior Court:

- Operates at four sites, including the King County Courthouse, Juvenile Court, and Mental Illness Court at Seattle locations; and the Maleng Regional Justice Center in Kent
- Has 53 judges and 9 commissioners
- Is supported by more than 500 staff in Superior Court and the Department of Judicial Administration (Clerk's Office)

Message from Chief Administrative Officer Paul L. Sherfey

In 2016, the court offered new services, expanded existing programs, and worked to promote access and inclusion. In the pages that follow, you will read about our many accomplishments for the year, including articles on the following topics:

New Jury Summons. In 2016, the court's Jury Department began using a new jury summons the size of a postcard. Research shows that keeping a summons short increases the likelihood that it will be read and responded to. The new format also saves the court money in postage costs.

Dependency 201. In 2016, the court's Parents for Parents Program, which supports parents in the dependency system, added a set of 'upper division' classes. Called "Dependency 201," the new classes provide information on resources available to parents working to reunite with their kids; information on navigating the dependency system; and life skills.

Family Treatment Court Expansion. In 2016, our Family Treatment Court (FTC), which serves as a drug court for families in the dependency system, used a federal SAMHSA grant to extend the Kent FTC calendar from a half day to a full day and to hire two more family support staff. This made it possible for the FTC to serve almost one-third more adults in 2016 than in the year before.

Diversity and Inclusiveness Events. In 2016, the court partnered with many community organizations to celebrate King County's diverse cultural heritage. Programs for Black History Month, Asian-Pacific American Heritage Month, LGBT Pride Month, Hispanic Heritage Month, and Native American History Month provided opportunities to recognize and celebrate the many communities and traditions that make our county great. The court's popular Equity and Social Justice Book Club also read and discussed seven books that touch on issues affecting different ethnic and social groups.

Family Court Statistics. In 2016, our Unified Family Court continued to serve thousands of family law litigants. A significant majority of parties to family law actions find themselves without an attorney at some point in the court process, and the court offers services that can help. More than 24,000 people visited our Family Law Information Center alone!

Language 161. In 2016, Superior Court's Office of Interpreter Services provided service in 11 new languages, raising the grand total of languages served to 161. Every day, the court provides interpretation services for 60 to 100 events, sometimes in unfamiliar languages where interpreters are hard to find.

King County Superior Court – Jurisdiction:

- Felony criminal matters and misdemeanor criminal cases not otherwise provided for by law
- Civil matters involving more than $300, unlawful detainers, and injunctions
- Family law, including dissolutions, child support, adoptions, parentage, and domestic violence protection matters
- Probate and guardianship matters
- Mental illness and involuntary commitment matters
- Juvenile offender matters, and juvenile dependencies involving abused and neglected children, children in need of services, at-risk youth, and trancies

FIRS Respite Center Opens Its Doors

In 2015, the court laid the groundwork for FIRS – Family Intervention Restorative Services – which offers a new approach for handling youth who have been violent in their homes. Under this approach, an eligible youth may enter into a “FIRS Agreement,” which allows the youth to skip formal court processing and benefit from interventions and services right away.

Historically, nearly a third of bookings into Juvenile Detention have been related to juvenile violence in the home. Under the traditional court model, a youth and the youth’s family could not receive beneficial services until after a formal court process had run its course. This meant that charges had to be filed and a court case had to be processed to adjudication before a family could receive help.

FIRS changed all that. Within hours of being detained, each eligible youth meets with a FIRS Juvenile Probation Counselor (JPC), and the youth’s family meets with Step-Up Program social workers. (You can read more about the Step-Up Program later in this report.) The JPC and Step-Up social workers work together to determine what interventions and services are needed for the youth and family. These may include drug or alcohol treatment; mental health treatment; evidence-based services such as Aggression Replacement Therapy; and/or participation in the 21-session Step-Up curriculum. The key is that the youth and family get help at their time of crisis, without the delay associated with formal court processing.

In 2016, the FIRS Program opened a small respite center in a converted section of the Juvenile Detention facility. The center serves as an alternative to secure detention for youth who have been violent in the home. Youth can stay in the center until it is a safe for them to return home or until a safe place outside the home can be identified. While in the center, youth have the opportunity to continue their work with the FIRS team.

FIRS is a partnership between the court and clerk’s office, the King County Prosecuting Attorney’s Office, the Department of Public Defense, the Department of Adult and Juvenile Detention, and the City of Seattle.

The FIRS Respite Center

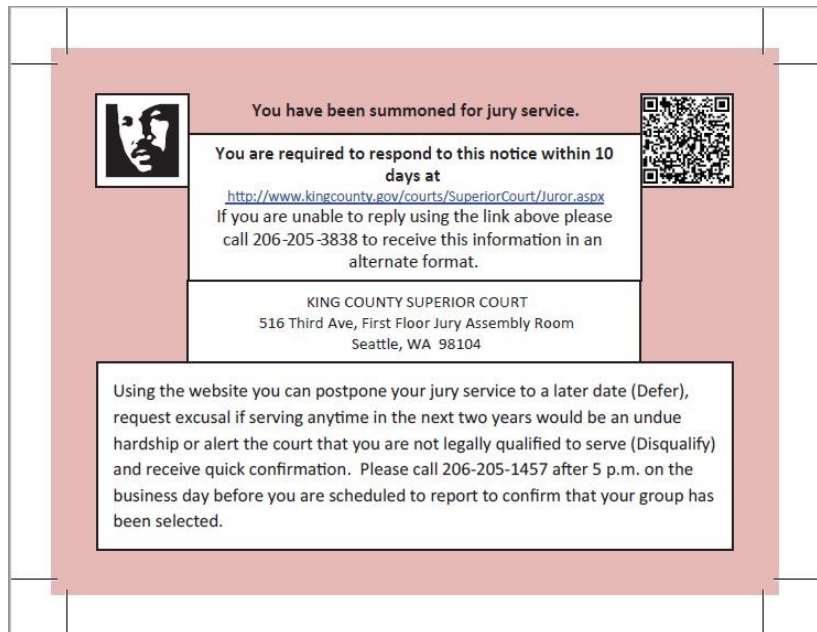

In 2016, 151 youth entered into FIRS Agreements. As the program grows, the court believes that up to 300 fewer youth will be booked into detention each year.

Jury Department Begins Using “Postcard” Summons

In 2016, the court’s Jury Department began using a new jury summons the size of a postcard. Not only is this format cheaper to print and mail, but available research also indicates that keeping the summons concise increases the likelihood that it will be read and not set aside and forgotten.

The new summons directs candidates to the court’s website, where they can confirm their eligibility, reschedule to a more convenient date, or request excusal on the basis of undue hardship. The court recognizes that not everyone can or will log in online, but so far the change has brought a significant and welcome reduction in the number of hard copy “snail mail” responses.

The court is using a portion of its postage savings to send reminders to prospective jurors who do not timely reply. Studies have found that such reminders result in significantly improved juror turnout.

Court Announces Interpreter Rate Increase

In 2016, the court was happy to announce that, effective July 1, 2017, the hourly rate for non-certified interpreters will go from $40 to $50 and the hourly rate for registered and certified interpreters will go from $45 to $55. Superior Court worked closely with the King County Executive and the County Council to increase the hourly rates paid to interpreters. The increase should help the court maintain and expand the highly-skilled pool of interpreters that serve the court on a daily basis.

Office of Interpreter Services Reaches Language 161

In 2016, Superior Court’s Office of Interpreter Services (OIS) provided assistance in its 161st language: Rohingya, spoken in northwestern Burma. OIS also provided service in ten other new languages in 2016—an unusually active year for new languages. The office sometimes must go to great lengths to locate and vet interpreters for languages which, in many cases, are just beginning to appear in the U.S.

On any given day, there are 60 to 100 events in Superior Court that need interpreters. The most requested languages are Spanish, Vietnamese, Somali, Russian, Amharic, Tigrinya, Mandarin, Tagalog, and American Sign Language.

Family Court by the Numbers

Overview. Family Court offers programs that support Superior Court's Dependency and Family Law litigants and cases. Twelve judges, five commissioners, and roughly 80 staff are assigned to this area of the court. This represents approximately 28% of the court's judicial and staff resources.

Dependency Operations. When there is reason to believe that a child has been abandoned or abused, or when a child has no parent or guardian capable of providing adequate care, the State files a petition with the court to take custody of the child. This is called a 'dependency' case.

In 2016:

- 724 dependencies were filed
- 2817 dependencies were active at year's end

Dependency CASA Program. Court Appointed Special Advocates (CASAs) – specially-trained citizen volunteers – represent children in dependency cases and make recommendations to the court regarding their care. The court's Dependency CASA Program recruits, trains, supervises, and provides legal support for these volunteers.

In 2016:

- 83 new CASAs were trained
- 816 children were represented by 320 CASAs
- 1742 reports were submitted to the court

Family Treatment Court (FTC). FTC is a "drug court" for parents with dependency cases pending. Parents join FTC to receive help in achieving and maintaining sobriety. Additional services, such as mental health treatment, are provided as needed. The goal is to ensure that children live in safe and drug-free homes.

In 2016:

- 84 adults were served (45% were homeless upon intake)
- 107 children were served (48% were aged 0-2 yrs.; 74% were <6 yrs. old)

Parents for Parents (P4P). P4P supports parents with dependency cases pending. Parents who have successfully navigated the dependency system meet with incoming parents at their first court appearance. Program staff subsequently provide a two-hour orientation class called Dependency 101 and a set of follow-up classes called Dependency 201. Parents who receive support from P4P are more likely to attend court hearings and comply with court orders.

In 2016:

- 493 parents met with P4P in court
- 11 parents met with P4P in jail
- 478 parents signed up for the Dependency 101 class
- 57 parents signed up for the Dependency 201 class

Dependency Mediation. The Dependency Mediation Program provides a non-confrontational environment for resolving issues related to dependency cases. Parents in mediation often reach agreement on allegations, recommended services, child placement, visitation, and other matters through the support of program staff. This allows parents to exert more control in determining what will happen with their children and their cases and to understand more fully the orders issued by the court.

In 2016:

- 289 cases were referred for mediation
- 80% of mediated cases reached full or partial agreement

Family Court by the Numbers

Family Court Services (FCS). FCS helps resolve conflicts between parents and provides information to the court in family law cases. Professional social work staff provide mediation and evaluation services for parenting plans (PPs), conduct domestic violence (DV) assessments, help finalize adoptions, and teach the mandatory parenting seminar. The primary objective of the program is to protect the best interests of children affected by family law actions.

In 2016:

- 2736 referrals were screened
- 135 PP mediations were conducted
- 265 PP evaluations were completed
- 208 DV assessments were completed
- 4653 parents attended the parenting seminar
- 459 adoptions were finalized

Becca Programs. The court can provide assistance if a child is beyond a parent's control or is not attending school. Parents may file an At-Risk Youth (ARY) or Child in Need of Services (CHINS) petition when their families are in crisis. School districts are required to file truancy petitions when students fail to attend their assigned school. Services provided by the court are called "Becca Programs," named for Becca Hedman, a 13-year-old runaway found murdered in Spokane in 1993.

In 2016:

- 247 ARY/CHINS families were referred to crisis intervention services
- 1222 truancy petitions were filed with the court by 22 school districts

Family Law Information Center (FLIC). The FLIC provides assistance to family law litigants who do not have attorneys. Family Law Facilitators help litigants find the correct court forms for their cases, explain court processes, and ensure that family law courtrooms run smoothly. Early Resolution Case Managers teach the Family Law Orientation (FLO) class and help finalize documents for certain family law cases.

In 2016:

- 3364 clients met with facilitators
- 7130 case files were reviewed for placement on court calendars
- 3588 litigants attended the FLO
- 24,091 people visited the FLIC

Training Oversight Committee Offers Free CLEs

Superior Court's Training Oversight Committee and the Family Law Section of the King County Bar Association offer free continuing legal education classes (CLEs) six times each year. Each class takes place over a lunch hour and is eligible for 1.25 CLE credits. Classes are offered both in Seattle and in Kent. No registration is required.

The Training Oversight Committee was established in 1997 to sponsor monthly trainings for attorneys, judges, commissioners, guardians ad litem, social workers, and other family law professionals. Trainings typically are scheduled for November and then each month from January to May. Topics covered include domestic violence, mental health, chemical dependency, cultural awareness and competency, and child development.

For information about upcoming classes, please call (206) 477-1475.

Case and Financial Management System (CFMS) Replacement Moves Forward

For more than 30 years, the clerk's office has used the Superior Court Management Information System (SCOMIS) and the Judicial Information System (JIS), both maintained by the state Administrative Office of the Courts (AOC), to fulfill many of its record-keeping responsibilities. AOC is working to replace these systems, but court data will be managed differently in the future. Many King County court records will move from the state systems to a new local system which also will need to track a large volume of financial transactions.

In 2015, the clerk's office kicked off a Case and Financial Management System (CFMS) replacement effort to identify and implement this new local system. The new CFMS will hold information from roughly 3.5 million cases the day it goes live. (Court case records go all the way back to the 1850s!) The new system also will help manage hundreds of thousands of financial transactions each year totaling many millions of dollars, and will interface with both the county's and AOC's financial systems. The prospect of implementing such a complex system is daunting, but replacing a 30-year-old legacy system also creates many exciting opportunities.

In 2016, the clerk's office took several important steps toward making the new CFMS a reality. Early in the year, the office selected a vendor to deliver the new system. This required weeks of scoring proposals, participating in vendor demonstrations, visiting reference sites, and then negotiating the contract, but it kept the project on-track to meet its anticipated January 2018 "go-live" date.

Financial Transactions:

- 400,000 incoming payments per year, totaling $150 million
- 25,000 disbursements per year
- 163,000 open accounts receivable, totaling more than $800 million

Records to Be Migrated from AOC:

- Roughly 3.5 million cases
- More than 13.5 million case participants
- More than 60 million docket entries
- Roughly 75 million journal entries

The clerk's office also assembled a team of Subject Matter Experts (SMEs) to support the vendor's work. Each SME has in-depth knowledge of a particular business process that needs to be represented in the new system. The SMEs are helping to define each business process, review vendor deliverables, and provide direction and feedback about configurations and customizations. Eventually, they also will create training materials, provide training, and help test the new system.

Systems Replacement Project

Employee Communications Team

Let's Talk!

Finally, the clerk's office created a CFMS Employee Communications Team to help ensure that all clerk's office staff are fully engaged in the project. This team serves as a conduit for project communications between staff and the project team. The team's underlying goal is to address all questions, comments, and concerns as the system is being developed, and its slogan is "Let's Talk!"

Step-Up Moves to Superior Court

In 2016, Superior Court assumed responsibility for the Step-Up Program. Previously this program had been housed in the Clerk's Office. Step-Up is a nationally recognized approach for addressing youth violence in the home. Violent behavior includes threats, intimidation, property destruction, degrading language, and physical violence. The goal of Step-Up is for the youth to stop his or her violent behavior and develop respectful family relationships, so that all family members feel safe.

Step-Up uses a 21-session cognitive behavioral, skills, and restorative practice-based curriculum. Teens and parents both come to group once a week for 90 minutes. Teens work in a youth group, where they learn skills to prevent their use of violence. Parents attend a parent group, where they learn safety planning and parenting skills. In a combined parent/teen group, parents and teens practice respectful communication and problem solving together.

Family safety is a priority of the Step-Up Program. Each family develops a 'safety plan' and participates in weekly check-ins with the parent/teen group to assess progress. Weekly behavioral goals are set by each youth, with progress reported each week in group. This helps foster accountability for behavior and keeps the focus on using newly learned skills at home

The Step-Up Team: Claudia Pineda, Lily Anderson, Francesca Peila-Phariss, Anna Doolittle

Evaluations of Step-Up have shown a significant reduction in the use of violent and abusive behavior in youth who complete the program. Step-Up was the first program of its kind in the country and frequently serves as a model for other programs. Juvenile courts, community agencies, youth counseling programs, and schools throughout the United States and even in other countries are now using the Step-Up curriculum.

Restorative Mediation Continues at Juvenile Court

Restorative mediation provides an alternative to the traditional court process for eligible cases. A restorative mediation brings together the victim of a crime with the person who committed that crime. The goal of this encounter is for the victim and offender to understand one another, to understand the scope of the harm caused by the crime, and to develop a plan that addresses the harm and restores the relationship between the victim, the offender, and the community at large.

In 2016, six cases were resolved through mediation. Charges in those cases ranged from shoplifting and truancy to burglary and assault. The youth who participated ranged in age from 12 to 16 years. The court also began using "peacemaking circles" as a restorative tool. The peacemaking process builds relationships between participants first before arriving at issues and seeking solutions.

Superior Court Celebrates Diversity and Promotes Inclusiveness

Each year, the Courts and Community Committee, a group of Superior Court judges and staff, sponsors a variety of events that celebrate King County's diverse cultural heritage. In 2016, the committee sponsored the following events:

- In February, to celebrate Black History Month and the legacy of Justice Thurgood Marshall, Washington NAACP President, Gerald Hankerson, spoke about civil rights activism and the courage of dissent. Judge Hill, Judge McCullough, and King County Councilmember Larry Gossett also offered thoughtful comments on the topic, and Bailiff Christine Robinson led attendees in singing the Black National Anthem, "Lift Every Voice and Sing."
- In May, to celebrate Asian-Pacific American Heritage Month, representatives from the Asian Counseling and Referral Center provided information on the changing demographics of King County and the services available through their organization.
- In June, to celebrate LGBT Pride Month, QLaw board member Yvonne Curtis moderated a "101" panel discussion of transgender legal issues. The panelists were David Ward, legal and legislative counsel with LegalVoice; Marsha Botzer, founder and board member of Ingersoll Gender Center; and Denise Diskin, an attorney with Teller and Associates. On Sunday, June 26, 2016, several judges and staff from the court and clerk's office also marched in the Seattle Pride Parade.
- In September, to celebrate Hispanic Heritage Month, Dr. Sandra Madrid, former assistant dean for students and community outreach at the UW Law School, spoke about how to foster and support a more representative and culturally competent bar and judiciary. The event also included artwork by Latina artist Raquel Garcia and a traditional dance performance by Grupo Bailadores de Bronce.

- In November, to celebrate Native American History Month, Washington's only Native American Superior Court Judge, Raquel Montoya-Lewis from Whatcom County, talked about her personal history and the legal history of Native American peoples; the Chief Seattle Drum Group performed; artist and member of the Port Gamble S'Klallam Tribe Anthony Jones offered remarks and shared his work; and several inspiring local Native American youth received recognition awards.

Office of Interpreter Services Hits Language 161

Since 1992, Superior Court's Office of Interpreter Services has provided assistance in 161 languages, and that list of languages grows longer each year. While one might expect to see requests for assistance in languages commonly spoken in our area, many of the languages on our list are ones you may never have heard of. The most recent iteration of the list is reproduced below. When a language does not share its name with a place (e.g., Bosnian with Bosnia), location information is provided.

Parents for Parents Adds “Upper Division” Classes

The Parents for Parents Program offers support for parents with dependency cases pending. The Program consists of three elements: Parent Ally* support at dependency hearings, a two-hour educational class called Dependency 101, and—beginning in 2016—a new support course called Dependency 201.

Dependency 201 is a set of six classes designed to offer continued mentoring and resource support through the dependency case. Parents can choose to join one or all six of the classes offered, with certificates given for each class completed. Dependency 201 covers a variety of topics, including:

- Visitation;
- Housing and DSHS Services;
- Family Law Resources;
- Parenting and Childcare Resources;
- Navigating the Dependency System; and
- Life Skills.

The only requirement is prior attendance at Dependency 101.

*"Parent Allies" are parents who have successfully navigated the juvenile dependency system.

Family Treatment Court Expands with Grant

In late 2015, the Family Treatment Court (FTC) Program received a $975,000 federal SAMHSA grant to expand and enhance services to King County residents involved in the child welfare system. Using this award, FTC began offering a full court day calendar in Kent, starting in September 2016. FTC also added and filled two Family Recovery Support Specialist (FRSS) positions. These positions help facilitate access to treatment and other services for program participants. They also assist in obtaining and coordinating services for dependent children. These additions made it possible for FTC to serve almost one-third more adults in 2016 than in the year before.

Court Hosts Visit from Maricopa County

In June 2016, Dependency Operations and the Parents for Parents Program hosted a two-day visit by judges, administrators, clerks, and attorneys from Maricopa County Dependency Court (Arizona). Casey Family Programs sponsored the visit, which focused primarily on our Parents for Parents program. Maricopa County is a very large court, with 24 dependency judges managing 13,000 children in care. King County has four dependency judges managing fewer than 3,000 children in care.

The Maricopa visitors learned about our dependency system, participated in a panel presentation with representatives from stakeholder groups, observed a Dependency 101 class, and had in-depth discussions with the Parents for Parents program managers and parent allies. The visitors were particularly impressed by our Parents for Parents Program and left with the intention of establishing a similar program in their court.

Education Employment Training Named “Research-Based Program”

2016 was the Education Employment Training (EET) Program’s first year as a “research-based program.” Twenty years ago, the state legislature established a three-tiered system to identify effective programs for youth. “Evidence-based” programs—the top tier—have been rigorously evaluated more than once. “Research-based” programs have some research demonstrating effectiveness but do not yet meet the evidence-based standard. “Promising programs” show solid potential based on preliminary information. EET became a “promising program” in 2010. On December 31, 2015, EET met the criteria of a “research based program.”

EET serves more than 200 court-involved youth each year. The program provides job readiness training and connects youth with jobs. The program also requires that youth stay (or reengage) in school or work toward completing their GED. Participation in the program has been shown to reduce recidivism.

Juvenile Court Offers Parent Youth Connection Seminar In Spanish

The Parent Youth Connections Seminar (PYCS) is an evidence-based program serving low-risk youth offenders and their parents or other adults involved in their lives. The 12-hour seminar takes place over 2 days (6 hours per day) and consists of five to eight interactive sessions guided by speakers from local community organizations. The program is designed to:

- Reduce recidivism for participants;
- Increase positive relationships between caregivers and children; and
- Increase a family’s knowledge of, and connection to, community resources.

In 2016, for the first time, this seminar was offered in Spanish. Participating youth opened up about themselves in ways that would not have been possible for them in English, and mothers shared contact information at the end of the seminar in order to create a support system. The court hopes to continue offering the PYCS in Spanish.

Clerk’s Office Consolidates and Streamlines Space

In 2016, the Superior Court Clerk’s Office made several space-related changes designed to improve the customer experience and streamline operations. In Kent, the main service counter was pushed back four feet. This expanded the public waiting area, increasing the space for strollers, walkers, travel bags, and wheelchairs. Also in Kent, the protection order customer service counter was moved to a more private location. This provides a more comfortable place for customers to discuss these sensitive matters. In Seattle, storage of exhibits for open court cases was moved from the basement of the courthouse to the 6th floor, within the clerk’s primary office area. This makes these exhibits more accessible for trials in the building. It also increases safety for the exhibit room staff person, who previously worked alone in the basement.

County Executive “Walks in the Shoes” of Court Reporters

King County’s “Walk in the Shoes of a County Employee” program gives county employees a chance to show Executive Constantine how their position contributes to the success of their agency and why their job is important to King County residents. In 2016, Executive Constantine visited Superior Court to learn more about our court reporters.

Court reporters provide a service called ‘Realtime,’ which is a live stream of written verbatim testimony. Realtime is particularly useful in complex cases because the judge and attorneys can use the transcript to refer back to earlier testimony over the course of a lengthy trial. Court reporter Mike Townsend Jr. showed the Executive how Realtime works. Reporters create individual dictionaries in their stenotype machines so that when they type a specific sequence of characters in steno, specialized software can translate the characters into English instantaneously. Reporters create special steno “words” for proper nouns and technical terms for each specific trial. A reporter’s individual steno language is constantly expanding—even during the length of one trial—as the reporter updates his or her dictionary to produce the most accurate Realtime. Executive Constantine enjoyed learning about this service.

County Executive “Walks in the Shoes” of Family Law Facilitators

In 2016, Executive Constantine also “walked in the shoes” of the Family Law Facilitator Program, which provides information and referrals to family law litigants who are not represented by attorneys. He learned about the numerous ways this program offers assistance.

A team of attorneys called Early Resolution Case Managers (ERCMs) provides information and referrals and conducts mediations, which are meetings aimed at resolving disagreements outside the court process. The Executive was able to observe a mediation first-hand. The ERCMs also teach the Family Law Orientation, which is designed for parties who do not have attorneys. It provides essential information on court processes, court rules, and resources for seeking assistance.

The Executive also learned about the court’s Simple Dissolution Program, which allows many couples to finalize their cases with minimal court involvement, and he learned about the Family Law Facilitators, who walk clients through the divorce process and review their forms for completeness. He thanked the team for his visit.

Superior Court Recognizes Exceptional Employees

Each year, Superior Court recognizes one court employee at each of its three primary locations who represents the high standards that all court staff aspire to achieve. Nominated by judges, commissioners, court supervisors, or their peers, these staff:

- Offer new, innovative ideas for improving service and efficiency;
- Go above and beyond the call of duty;
- Are exceptionally courteous and helpful; and
- Demonstrate outstanding reliability in the workplace.

In 2016, the court recognized the following employees for outstanding contributions to the court:

King County Courthouse (Seattle) and Maleng Regional Justice Center (Kent): Kiese Wilburn. Kiese is bailiff to Judge Lori Kay Smith. During 2016, Judge Smith served as the court's Chief Family Court Judge, with Kiese as her right-hand assistant. Kiese is widely recognized for her good work. Judges and co-workers describe her as hard-working, a treasure, resourceful, generous, approachable, courteous, patient, compassionate, a ray of sunshine and a hub of communication and expertise. They state that she goes the extra mile to help people, even under challenging conditions, and makes every day just a bit better for all.

Youth Services Center (Juvenile Court): Jackie Snodgrass. Jackie is a Court Program Specialist at Juvenile Court. She serves as a "court coordinator," helping to ensure that court proceedings run smoothly. She is familiar with many types of proceedings, and therefore is frequently called upon to fill gaps in coverage. Those who work with her describe her as highly reliable and dependable and rate the quality of her work as exceptional. They also appreciate her willingness to share her knowledge and assist others. They describe her as approachable, respected, and gracious even under pressure.

Court's Equity and Social Justice Book Club Explores Ideas Together

In 2016, the court's ESJ Book Club discussed issues raised by the following seven books:

'Just Mercy'—Bryan Stevenson

'Everything I Never Told You'—Celeste Ng

'War Dances'—Sherman Alexie

'Night'—Elie Wiesel

'Life on the Color Line'—Gregory Howard Williams

'Between the World and Me'—Ta-Nehisi Coates

'Enduring Conviction'—Lorraine Bannai

Participants find that the club is a great way to share ideas about interesting reads!
