    - Can you cross train staff to help maintain the core functions?
  - What services might be suspended during a prolonged outbreak?
  - How might service hours be impacted?
  - How will you communicate these changes to your clients?
- Extra supplies – purchase and storage
- Creating Isolation areas – how to separate sick people from healthy ones
- Networking with partner agencies and volunteers
- Can employees work from home or other isolated sites?
- Update sick and medical leave policies to encourage self-quarantine in times of emergency?
- Time is of the essence – have gear and policies in place before an outbreak
- Encourage staff to have a personal plan

Sign-up for the Community Communications Network:

- The Community Communications Network (CCN) is designed to improve Public Health's ability to outreach to vulnerable communities during an emergency.
- The CCN includes more than 600 agencies and community leaders and provides after hours contact information for the majority.
- In a crisis, Public Health will use the CCN to contact agencies that provide services to vulnerable populations who may not have access to traditional communication channels.
- Community agencies pass this information to the vulnerable populations that they serve.
