

It's a great day to ride Metro

To keep our region moving, King County Metro never stopped during the pandemic. Whether you're currently riding transit or looking to return, we're happy to welcome you aboard.

An all-day regional network of frequent transit service

Across bus, light rail, paratransit, streetcar, water taxi, and on-demand services, our regional transit network is open for business. Metro is operating at roughly 90% of pre-pandemic service levels. On Oct. 2, 2021, Metro added about 200,000 service hours. This included restoring service on 48 routes, including 36 that were previously suspended. Metro also provided updated connections to the three new Sound Transit Link light rail stations at U District, Roosevelt, and Northgate, with many more to open in the years ahead.

Safety will always be our first priority

Our increased commitment to cleanliness and health will remain even after the pandemic. We disinfect every bus, streetcar, van, vehicle, and vessel every day. We upgraded air filters on every bus in our fleet. And we encourage contact-free payment, including by ORCA card and Transit GO Ticket. Masks continue to be required and we have free mask dispensers onboard. We're also working with communities and jurisdictions to ensure your safety not only on transit, but throughout your entire journey.

Reconnecting you to people and places that matter

Metro is your convenient, healthy, and sustainable option to get to appointments, classes, entertainment, shopping, work, and more. Right now, we're coordinating with employers to meet your evolving travel needs. And we're collaborating with partners to revitalize our cities and towns. As we move forward together, our goal is for transit to always be your first choice for mobility.

Learn more
kingcounty.gov/metro

King County
METRO

Moving forward together